SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 8.—An eighth juror was obtained to try Theodore Durrant for murder at the forencon session of the superior court. He is F. P. Hooper, a lumber merstands high in the community.

An unusually large crowd thronged expectation that some action would be taken in the threatened contempt prosedings against certain newspapers for interviewing jurors regarding their standing in the case. After a number veniremen had been examined, on of veniremen had been examined, one of the defendant's attorneys presented a bundle of affidavits from his client and asked that citations be issued for the editors and city editors of the Chronicle and the Examiner.

The attorney also asked for further time to prepare affidavits concerning the actions of other newspaper men who had published statements concerning jurymen which he considered in "The doubts of the comptroller arise, as I understand it," said the sensitor, "on the constitutionality of the law. The act of Congress is precise, plain, clear and mandatory.

Comptroller's Attitude.

"The attitude of the comptroller is one of apparent resistance to the exe-cution of an act of Congress. Ques-tions of grave and serious import tions of grave and serious import arise. An extraordinary spectacle is here presented. Three gentlemen, who as senators of the United States actively participated in the passage of the bounty appropriation through the Senate, and two members of the House of Representatives who did the same in that body are present at this hearing and for what purpose? To present before a subordinate official of the treasury department reasons why he should execute the law of Congress. Upon what degenerate times have we fallen, that high legislastive officers of the government feel compelled in the discharge of their public duties to appear personally and urge that effect be given to a law of the land. It would seem that their duties do not end with the enactment of a statute. They must needs follow it up into the executive branch and see its execution.

"What is the nature of this office of comptroller? What are its duties, powers, jurisdiction? Can the comptroller question the walldity of an act of Congress? Is he anything more than an administrative or ministerial officer? Must he not execute the law as he finds it? If the comptroller of the treasury may refuse his sanction to the proper proceedings required to take this money from the treasury after its appropriation by Congress, no appropriation whatever is safe. arise. no appropriation whatever is safe.

"The president, it seems, must approve an appropriation act as a whole, or veto it as a whole. He cannot by the constitution approve certain items of appropriation in the bill and veto what does not meet his ap-proval, but not so the comptroller. He is circumscribed by no such nar-row limit." An act of Congress, said the senator, approved by the president is not guidance for the treasury officials; is not a warrant for drawing money from the treasury until his own peculiar test of the constitutionality is applied to it by the comptroller. These

The act of Congress, Mr. Blanchard asserted, constitutes the comptroller an administrative or ministerial officer invested with no judicial duty whatever. The most that could be claimed for him was that he was a ministerial officer with quasi-judicial functions.

The law heretofore referred to directs the payment of money to the sugar producers upon the ascertainment of their claims in the manner provided by law. It is a ministerial act to be penformed. Quasi-judicial functions may be exercised in deciding the amount due upon the state of facts presented, but once this is desided, every step leading up to the payment of the money is a purely ministerial act.

Mr. Blanchard then proceeded to examine into the character of the office of the comptroller to see what purpose it subserved in the administration of the treasury department and he contended that the person holding it was but an accounting officer. Having as he said, shown that the comptroller was to be considered a ministerial officer alone, although he performed certain quasi-judicial functions, the senator proceeded to inquire whether it was within the comptroller's province to question the validity of the statute under consideration. These suggestions for hay making These suggestions for hay making are the result of many years of close observation in the hay field and the feed lot. Every effort should be made to save all there is in the best manner possible, in the full assurance that quality will redeem in a great measure any loss in quantity.

Every up-to-date farmer knows that the best balanced and most palatable been used. hay is made by early cuting, but he knows also that the early cuting done at some expense in weight; that is to say, a given area will yield fewer pounds, although these pounds will be richer in potein and will be consumed with greater avidity by farm animals than who has the title, performs the work and hopes to get the praise as Directories and hopes to the daily loom, and that which it done from two to three weeks later, amounts to as much as 20 per cent. This is not true of alfalfa hay. Whether one pends upon the use that is to be consumed on the farm, especially if it is to be fed to dairy cows, which appreciate and give returns for a toothsome, appetizing article, as near like June grass as it can be made, then it is wise to cut early; but cutting early is a good deal like fattening pork for a "streak of fat and a streak of lean." It is well to do both for home supplies, but it does not pay to do either for sale, when the market does not appreciate either hay cut in early bloom or the proposition of the praise and prov done at some expense in weight; that is to say, a given area will yield fewer price is concerned, at what stage it is cut. So long as the market is not ap-preciative of the difference, and does not recognize it in the price made, there is little inducement to sacrifice tonnage to quality. But where the hay is to be fed at home, or the pork is for the farmer's own fall killing, then pains can be taken to make the best, and it will pay to take them. that in converting grass into hay much of the nutritive value of the grass is of Clover, when growing alone, matures before timothy, and should be cut in June, for at no time will it make better hay than when in full bloom, just before the forming of the seed. When combined with timothy, as it always should be clover must stand till the timothy is ready for the mower, which is also about the period of full bloom. In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the corporate seal of said city this, the Erd day of July, A. D. 1856.

(Seal.)
G. H. BACKMAN, City Recorder,

The Burton Stanley Opera company, in "Mrs. Partington and her son Ike," drew a large attendance to Wonderland last evening. Although the plece possesses not an atom of plot, it serves as a means for introducing several clever as well as distinctly funny specialities. The singing of Miss Crews, Miss Southern and Mr. Boyce was highly appreciated by the audience, who demonstrated their approval in no niggardly style. Burton Stanley, as Widow Partington, was immensely funny. A vocal selection allied with a terpsichorean feat, which he performed in act I, fairly brought the house down. He certainly is in his element when disguised beneath a petticoat.

"Mrs. Partington" will run to the end of the week, with a change of bill next week.
